

Dillon Gage Metals Refinery Continues to Thrive Sound operating plan and service-oriented platform outlasts competition

ADDISON, Texas (Nov. 20, 2018) – Dillon Gage Metals, one of the world’s largest precious metals wholesale firms, is celebrating the continued success of its refinery operation, now in its 22nd year in business. This comes amid recent news of competing refineries who either shuttered operations or have filed for bankruptcy protection.

“What we’re seeing recently appears to be a shake-out in the industry,” stated Terry Hanlon, president of Dillon Gage Metals. “Our refining operation has remained on solid ground for reasons that have everything to do with establishing sound business principles for the reclamation and refining of precious metals.”

Hanlon cites several specifics that place Dillon Gage Metals’ refining operation apart from the competition, beginning with the company’s financial strength. Additionally, Dillon Gage Metals charges reasonable fees that are disclosed to the customer up front. Lastly, the company is proud of the reputation it has earned through its prestigious industry associations that include the London Bullion Market Association (LBMA), International Precious Metals Institute (IPMI), Industry Council for Tangible Assets (ICTA), National Pawnbrokers Association (NPA), American Numismatic Association (ANA) and Professional Numismatists Guild (PNG). Dillon Gage Metals is also one of a handful of global precious metals wholesalers licensed to distribute products from all nine sovereign mints around the world.

“We’ve spent decades building a solid reputation for our refining capabilities,” Hanlon added. “It’s done through superior technology, equipment and expertise—providing precious metals refining settlements for gold and silver as quickly as 24 hours at our Dallas facility. We don’t use middlemen, so our customers always know where their assets are and who is processing them.”
